I look forward to nine holes of golf
 at day's end,
 when others are absent
 and there is only the course and me.
 Score card and pencil remain in the bag.
 Camaraderie and competition are in the past.
 The grass is soft and easy on the feet,
 a verdant welcome mat.
 My swing has gone,
 but not the challenge.

If I par I walk off
 rejuvenated by silent applause.
 A shank doesn't hurt
 and no alibis are needed.
 A good shot goes unnoticed
 except by insects hit by this meteor.
 With no pressure to win,
 distance is less important than accuracy.
 On the ninth, hazards are avoided and I feel like I've climbed a mountain.
