In the In Memoriam section of the Summer 2026 issue of The Pharos, the listing for Scott D. Friedman contained an error resulting in confusion with another individual of the same name. The listing incorrectly attributed the death to Dr. Scott L. Friedman and incorrectly listed Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai and 1979 in connection with the deceased individual. We regret this error and apologize to Dr. Scott L. Friedman as well as the family of the deceased, and the institutions and colleagues affected by the incorrect attribution. The journal sincerely regrets the error and has corrected the online record.

Loneliness in abundance—Hidradenitis Suppurativa

I find loneliness in abundance,
The serpentine masquerade of treatments
To drain the boils and abscesses that call me home,
Each remedy a glorious failure, tunneling deeper.

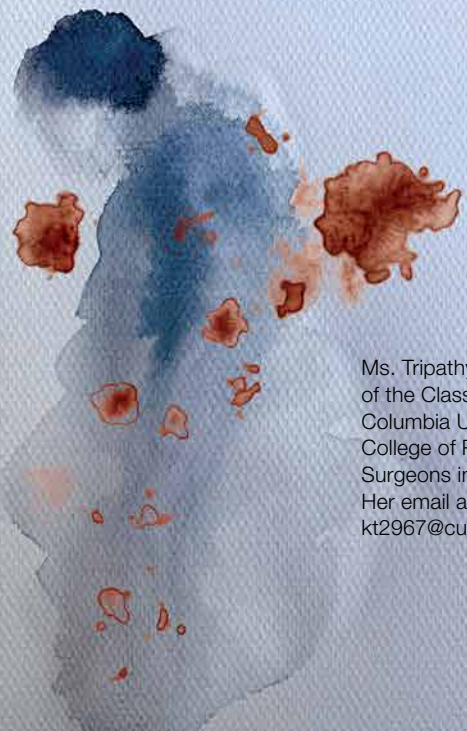

A serpentine masquerade of treatments—
Antibiotics, steroids, lasers, biologics, grafts, trials—
Each remedy a glorious failure, tunneling deeper;
My skin scars nearly as much as my being.

Antibiotics, steroids, lasers, biologics, grafts, trials—
Optimism in options has long run dry.
My skin scars nearly as much as my being;
The cure I crave is one too difficult to prescribe.

Optimism in options has long run dry;
I've driven my family and friends away.
The cure I crave is one too difficult to prescribe—
Perhaps there is gentler company on the other side.

I've driven my family and friends away;
Now comes a new diagnosis—pustular psoriasis.
Perhaps there is gentler company on the other side.
I find loneliness in abundance.
